Aviation

Flight at midnight

Home infused Blueberry Gin, Lime Juice, Maraschino, Crème de Violette, Vegan Foamer, Poppy Seeds

The Aviation Cocktail is a classic gin-based cocktail that has a rich history dating back to the early 20th century. The drink was created by Hugo Ensslin, a German-born bartender who was the head bartender at the Hotel Wallick in New York City.

The original recipe for the Aviation called for a combination of gin, lemon juice, maraschino liqueur, and crème de violette, a sweet and floral liqueur made from the essence of violets. The drink was a hit with cocktail enthusiasts, and it quickly became a popular choice in bars and restaurants across the United States.

Margarita

Spiced Blossom

Tequila, Mezcal, Triple Sec, Lime Juice, Blossom Bitters, Chilli and Orange Oil

The creation of the Margarita is often attributed to some crafty marketing moves from industry folk, specifically tequila manufacturers, around the 1940s. In truth, we'll never really know where it originated. The provenance of this drink can never be truly verified, but it's likely it was a product of the US/Mexico border regions between the 1930s and early 1950s.

Hemingway Daiquiri

The Old Man and the Sea

Barti Seaweed Spiced Rum, Home infused Woodruff Plantation 3, Luxardo Maraschino, Lime Juice, Grapefruit Juice*

Ernest Hemingway needed a bathroom. Or so the story goes. The novelist had stopped into Havana's El Floridita bar.. On his way out, he noticed the bartender setting up Daiquiris. Never one to walk past a drink, Hemingway took a sip. Not bad, he said, but he preferred them with no sugar and double the rum. The bartender made one as specified, and then named the drink after him.

Paloma

Pimienta Rosa

Home infused Pink Peppercorn Tequila, Lime Juice, Grapefruit Soda, Peach Foam

Traditionally, the Paloma is served on the rocks and prepared by mixing tequila, fresh lime juice and grapefruit-flavoured soda.

The history of the drink is obscure, no one knows for sure who invented the Paloma. Some credit the legendary Don Javier Delgado Corona, owner of the beloved La Capilla bar in the aptly-named town of Tequila in Jalisco, Mexico. Since Corona is also ascribed to creating another soda-based tequila cocktail, the Batanga (Coca-Cola, tequila and lime juice), this story seems plausible.

Mojito

Matcha Punch

Organic Matcha and Mint Washed Plantation 3, Lime Juice, Soda Water*

The Mojito originated in Havana, Cuba, although the exact birthplace is up for debate. One theory that many believe is that Sir Francis Drake, one of the privateers sponsored by England's Queen Elizabeth I, had involvement in 1586. Drake had landed off the Cuban shore with a cargo of Spanish treasure. King Philip II of Spain had warned his governor of Drake's arrival and his intent to steal the Aztec gold. While they were prepared, they were widely amazed when Drake sailed away from the riches port after only firing a few shots. Everything was left intact, but Drake's visit was a major event, perhaps something worthy of naming a drink after.

Royal Garden

Casoni Wild Berries Balsamic Liqueur, Champagne

Casoni Wild Berries is a unique liqueur that combines the sweetness of Italian berries with the sharp acidity of Modena balsamic vinegar. This savoury liqueur is the result of a collaboration between Italian liqueur producer Casoni and renowned bartender Marian Beke of London's Gibson bar. Add Champagne to it and you get the true challenger to the iconic Kir Royal

Casia Spring

Sazerac Rye, Yuzushu, Lavender cordial, Grapefruit Juice

The Casia Spring is a floral and refreshing cocktail. It was designed to encapsulate the British Summer and the blooming of our wonderful gardens. The cocktail draws upon two main flavours, Japanese citrus fruit 'Yuzu' and Lavender picked from our gardens. Using Rye Whiskey as a base, the flavours combines for a smooth tasting, delicious cocktail
